Mark description; The denomination is used as a noun, to denote a specific type of fried food product which in its final edible form has a golden yellow or yellow brownish colour. It has a crispy texture. The crispiness is an important feature of the product, as it is closely linked to the intended three-character Chinese denomination. The first two characters are identical, they are onomatopoeic sound for "popping" action. The characters themselves have no literal meaning, so they are interchangeable with any Chinese character with similar pronunciation. The third and last character is fixed and has only one meaning in Chinese. It means "crispy". Therefore, the denomination has the transliteration of "popping crispy". In English or Malay, our food product is simply called "crisply". Aside from its crispiness, the food has a unique salty flavour. Its main ingredient is a specially formulated fish meat and bean curd. The formulated fish paste is thinly spread and wedged between two sheets of bean curd before deep fried.

Mark transliteration ; "bo bo cui" in Chinese, and "bok bok cui" or "pok pok cui" in Cantonese

Mark translation; Popping crispy, crisply
